Translation Notes

Page 30 – Hannya
A Hannya is a Noh demon mask that symbolizes female jealousy, anger, or vengefulness.

Page 70 – Kouhai
Kouhai is the term for someone in a lower year at school in relation to an older student. Since Hori's a third-year, first- and second-year students would be her kouhai and will probably refer to her as senpai. The terminology carries over to companies and the working world, where employees may use these forms of address in reference to when they joined the company in relation to one another.

Page 99 – Baths
In Japan, baths are basically just for relaxation. Bathers shower beforehand, during which they shampoo their hair, soap up, and rinse off. It's only after the shower that the bather actually gets into the tub for a soak.

Page 114 – Slimes
Slimes are the mascot monster for the Dragon Quest video game franchise. They're notoriously weak.

Page 163 – SoftBank, Docomo, and AU
These three brands are all Japanese telecommunication companies.

"Shuwacchi!" is what the classic Japanese TV superhero Ultraman says when he transforms. Because Hagiwara's pose is also classic Ultraman, it's likely that this is a parody.
